Even saplings were destroyed; and drums; he turns down chairs for and every effort was made to take away the shade from the field, under the sapposition that sunlight was the only thing made into whips, mounts lounges and for a farmer to scoure to his pastures and drives four-in-hand; he asks for guns, crops. Wood was, for years, an incum-brance; a thing to be removed and dis-bears, and lions, and tigers, and is amused osed of on almost any terms.

A hundred and twenty years ago, dense sating upons and oxen The girl-baby the Hudson river. Massachusetts was an immense patch of wood. Maine was then at the very doors of Boston and Providence. See the year, ago the trees dence. See they were as abundant in Western New York dence. Seventy-five years ago the trees were as abundant in Western New York as they now are in Western New York as they now are in Western New York as they now are in Western Pennsylvania. To-day one may ride through Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connections and New York for miles, and pass through open farms with sourcely wood enough remaining to furnish the cultivator with what he needs for his own domestic use. It is alarming to make this review, and see how rapidly and ruthlessly the work of forest destruction has gone on. It is not that of clearing away a piece of woods bare and there, but hundreds of equare miles of forest have disappeared within a hundred years, and when the population of the country was comparatively small. With the increased poptation, and the requisite to denude Maine and Pennsylvania, and leave the Appalachian range of mountains as bare as the Black Hills of Moutans, and the fire scorched prairies of the West.

Another cause of the rapid disappearance of our forests is the are of the inmber and around them. They cut and slash

Dark Days.

D. D. WILLIAMS.

Late events have so familiarized people gith calamity that they have almost lost the habit of being shocked. The delirium which has covered Paris with blood and fire has surfeited the keenest appetite for rrors. The prophet who predicted only Dardegne. year ago the fate that has befallen that unhappy city would surely have had little who was reported dead, has been arrested. It is said Marshal, MoMahon has relinted in the very noonday of civiliant capital, in the very noonday of civiliant capital capital, in the very noonday of civiliant capital capita in happier times, the most etereotyped tale of distress. Consciously or not, most people have grown in a measure callons to anusually painful nature, any one of which would formerly have earned sensational prominence. That dreadful epedemic at Buenos Ayres, for example, with its thousands of victims, was probably as which Bocczcoio and Deloe have immor privates were killed and one talized. The two disastrous earthquakes in China and the East Indica have been no less noteworthy. Yet each of these extraordinary events has been dismissed A still more striking example of this

A still more striking example of this general indifference is afforded by the famine in Persia. Such meagre details as famine in Persia. Such meagre details as lature for the examination of all drugging affliction has fallen upon that unfortunate country. In certain districts, the starving inhabitants were trying to subsist on grass, in others they were self-country and in the rest in a country of the starving inhabitants were trying to subsist on grass, in others they were self-country and of the starving in re-use of tobacco stamps.
